

Turn a six-hour one-on-one into a six-minute read.

Stop guessing which agents are building your agency, and which are quietly burning your lead spend. We show you where calls break down, what to coach next, and which agents are earning more of your leads.

01

THE CALL, BEAT BY BEAT

representative call · illustrative

We find the one moment the sale breaks.

Intro	Why we're here	Financial inventory	Showing #s	Application	Social ask	Banking ask	Tie-down
HIT	HIT	HIT	HIT	HIT	HIT	LOST HERE	—

The break isn't always where it looks. A banking ask that stalls often starts in a thin financial inventory — so we trace it back to the root and name the most likely fix.

02

THE COST OF NOT SEEING

$1,500

The rookie gamble

Every time you hand a premium batch of leads to a new agent you can't see, you're running an expensive experiment — and you don't find out the result until the money's already gone.

You could catch exactly where they're losing the sale if you had time to listen to every call. You don't. So the audio sits in a folder, the rookie gives a vague excuse when the deal dies, and you end up paying for broad, generic training when what they needed was one specific fix.

It's not a training program.

It's a wishing well.

03

THE METHOD

A call film room for your new agents

They don't re-watch the whole season. They review the tape.

We review every new-agent call against your framework, isolate the moment the sale broke, and hand your trainer the one drill to fix it — then check next week whether it stuck.

“...no rush at all — whenever you feel comfortable we could maybe look at getting the bank details, but totally up to you, no pressure...”

A SENIOR CLOSER, ON THE EXACT 30 SECONDS:

He apologized for asking. Three hedges and an exit ramp. He handed her permission to stall. The delivery gave the sale away.

DRILL THIS WEEK

The assumptive banking ask: state it once, plainly, then stop talking.

04

THE WHOLE SYSTEM

Two questions. Everything falls out of them.

Are your new agents following the framework?

We read for the meaning of each milestone. Full credit when an agent makes the move in their own words — flagged only when the move is actually missing.

Are they fixing what you tell them to fix?

One coaching priority a week. Not twelve — one. The next week we check whether it actually changed. That's the difference between training and development.

WHAT YOU STOP DOING

– Rookies telling long stories about calls they can't explain

– Trainers burning hours hunting for the problem

– Handing leads to agents who aren't ready

WHAT YOU GET INSTEAD

– A weekly per-agent Ramp Report in plain English

– A human ear on the 30 seconds that mattered

– A monthly read: who's improving, who's stuck — by name

DID LAST WEEK'S FIX LAND?

Yes. Last week's priority was tightening the financial inventory — the FI is now solid, full credit. The leak moved downstream, which is progress, not failure.

Dominant leak: tentative banking ask. Holds through the financial inventory and social ask, then loses control right before the tie-down. 7 of 12 calls — a delivery miss, not a framework miss.

The Agency-Wide Macro Report

Who's improving, who's coachable, who's stuck — by name. Where the team breaks down, and which training is actually sticking.

Where to point your money: Nina and Ray are converting coaching into closes — they've earned a larger lead allocation. Tyler has repeated the same rushed close three weeks running across 14 leads. Worth weighing before his next premium batch.

WHAT HAPPENS IN THE FIRST 7 DAYS

nothing for your agents to send · nothing to chase

1	2	3	4	5
You connect your new-agent call recordings.	We run them through Agent Ramp Intelligence against your framework.	Each agent gets their first New Agent Ramp Report.	Your trainers get a focused coaching priority for each one.	You see who's improving and who's burning leads.

WE SELL VISIBILITY, NOT A MAGIC PILL

Stop guessing.
Start seeing.

The agents who make it got the right correction early enough to matter. The real growth isn't recruiting more people onto a broken ramp — it's the ramp itself.
